Organisations now face much stiffer penalties for breaching the Data Protection Act, which makes this pocket guide more valuable than ever! Your company holds personal information about your customers in electronic form. Almost certainly, you will also keep records on your staff in your computer system. In the digital age, managing personal information has become a key organisational challenge. For legal reasons, everyone has to understand the proper way to handle this personal data. Compliance Your business needs to operate in compliance with the Data Protection Act. This means your company has to take the right steps towards secure management of personal digital information. Under the Data Protection Act, some faults are treated as criminal offences. Where failure to comply is the fault of a manager, the manager can be prosecuted along with the company. A tougher regulatory environment Knowingly, or recklessly, obtaining or disclosing personal data is an offence under Section 55 of the Data Protection Act. In 2009, the Coroners and Justice Act amended the DPA to give the Information Commissioner the power to carry out compulsory assessments of government departments. This year, the government has further tightened the enforcement regime for the DPA. On 6 April 2010, tougher penalties came into effect, including custodial sentences for deliberate or careless disclosure of personal data. Deliberate, or reckless, disclosure of personal data by your staff will also put you in the firing line as their employer. The Information Commissioner's Office has acquired new powers to fine companies up to GBP500,000 for serious contraventions of the Data Protection Act. This pocket guide gives you a clear description of the Data Protection Act, outlining its terms and explaining its requirements. It is essential reading...
